A Nautical Heritage

Black Rock's most well known historical figure, Caleb Brewster, was featured prominently in the Revolutionary War drama "TURN." Brewster was an integral part of George Washington's Culper Spy Ring, rowing across Long Island Sound to ferry secret messages from Setauket LI to Connecticut.

Black Rock is one of the most active Long Island Sound seaport communities in Connecticut. From the tidal shores of Ash Creek to the deep water refuge of Black Rock Harbor, this community served an important role in the colonial settlement of Fairfield County.

In 1644 Black Rock was settled by the colonial English, displacing the local Unquowa residents, and became an important shipping and military port. As the battle for colonial independence became heated, a fort was erected on Grovers Hill to protect Fairfield center from British warships based on Long Island.

American independence brought increased commerce and development to Black Rock, which became home to wealthy shippers, farmers, and businessmen.

The construction of coastal railroads in the 1800's spurred development even further, and helped Black Rock become an important tourist destination. The massive and opulent George Hotel on Saint Mary's Point, built in 1874, attracted wealthy tourists from all over the world, and boasted modern conveniences including a direct electric connection to the New York Stock Exchange. Part of the George stands today as the clubhouse of the Black Rock Yacht Club.
